World Health Organization removes parental alienation from its classification index

février 23, 2020 reseauiml

Update of September 20, 2020: since September 2020, the withdrawal of any mention of parental alienation from the International Classification of Diseases (ICD-11) is validated. Indeed, the official version, blue, has just been updated, and no longer makes any reference to this term, as shown in this screenshot.

Original article:

On 15 February 2020, the WHO declared that it had removed this pseudoscientific concept from its index and classification (temporary version, orange).

The Italian members of the Facebook group PAS: informazioni e disinformazione were the first to spread the information. They spotted a comment from a WHO team, Team3 WHO, on the page of the Classification devoted to Psychological maltreatment, in response to a remark reminding that parental alienation has no scientific basis.

REPORT THIS AD

Team3 WHO declares:

Parental alienation has been removed from the ICD-11 classification as it is a judicial term and issue. Its inclusion for coding purposes in the ICD-11 will not contribute to valid or meaningful health statistics.

Thank you for your proposal. Parental alienation has been removed from the ICD-11 classification as it is a judicial term and issue. Its inclusion for coding purposes in the ICD-11 will not contribute to valid or meaningful health statistics.

The History of Parental Alienation Ideology

Made up by Richard Gardner, MD in 1985 with no research validation to support his view that the "vast majority" of sexual abuse allegations between separated or divorced parents which he believed were false. Several research studies later proved that his assumption about the rate of false allegations of sexual abuse in this group of cases was false but "Parental Alienation" ideology survived and is alive and well. It is spreading around the world like a contagious virus.

APSAC, now in partnership with The New York Foundling, was founded in 1987 and is a nonprofit, national organization working to meet the needs of professionals engaged in all aspects of services for maltreated children and their families, focusing on strengthening practice through knowledge.

In 2017, we launched the Center for Child Policy to translate research into usable resources that promote evidence-informed policy-making and best practices for all professions involved in the field child maltreatment.

APSAC POSITION STATEMENT: ASSERTIONS OF PARENTAL ALIENATION SYNDROME (PAS), PARENTAL DISORDER (PAD), OR PARENTAL ALLIENATION (PA) WHEN CHILD MALTREATMENT IS OF CONCERN

History of this Position Statement

- Stacie LaBlanc, APSAC President, asked Dr. Faller to draft a statement.
- I did so with reviews from my colleagues who are presenting with me today.
- Stacie reviewed it.
- It went to the APSAC Board of Directors and was accepted.

Agenda

Dr. Corwin is responsible for Authentic Voices, that is parents and children who have been traumatized by PA interventions.

Dr. Faller will summarize the APSAC position statement.

Dr. Milchman will describe a strategy for evaluation when PA is asserted.

Dr. Mercer will critique the research on PA and PA interventions.

General contents of the APSAC Position Statement

- Background to assertions that Parental Alienation Syndrome is the cause children are stating they have been maltreated by the "alienated parent."
- Revisions of Parental Alienation theory.
- APSAC's position is child safety takes precedence.
- The importance of considering multiple hypotheses when children express resistance, refusal, or fear of contact with a parent.
- The fundamental weakness of the PA explanation.

Background to Parental Alienation

- In 1985, Parental Alienation Syndrome was invented by the late Richard Gardner, M.D., who was in private practice and had his own press, Creative Therapeutics.
- Dr. Gardner asserted that the vast majority of allegations of incest were true, but allegations of sexual abuse when parents were separated and/or were divorcing were false.
- Dr. Gardner further asserted that these false allegations were a result of a collusion between the child and the non-abusing parent, sometimes aided and abetted by a female therapist.

Background to Parental Alienation

- Child abuse professionals challenged Dr. Gardner's theory, but the theory was embraced by some child custody evaluators and advocates on behalf of the accused parent.
- Efforts to get PAS included in the DSMs had been unsuccessful.
- In 2008, the theory was revised to be called Parental Alienation Disorder, a disorder of the child, in an attempt to get it included in DSM-5. This, too, was unsuccessful.

Background to Parental Alienation

Parental Alienation Advocates continue in their efforts to get PA accepted as a legitimate diagnosis, when children resist, refuse, or fear contact with the "alienated parent."

They have established an international group of Parental Alienation Advocates.

They have unsuccessfully tried to get PA into the ICD-11.

It is important to appreciate these advocates financially benefit from conducting evaluations and testifying in court that the cause of child resistance, refusal, and fear of contact derives from PA.

APSAC's position is that child safety should remain paramount; moreover, evaluators and other decision-makers must consider multiple hypotheses:

- 1. The child has been maltreated by the "alienated parent" (less preferred parent). This maltreatment may be physical, sexual, or psychological abuse. It can also include neglect of the child.
- 2. The child has witnessed physical, emotional, or other abuse by the less preferred parent.
- 3. The causes also include other bad acts on the part of the less preferred parent, including substance abuse.
- 4. The less preferred parent is mentally unstable.
- 5. The less preferred parent has historically had a poor relationship with the child.
- 6. The less preferred parent has failed to support the family financially.
- 7. The less preferred parent has disparaged the more preferred parent in the child's presence.
- 8. The less preferred parent has been uninvolved in the child's life and/or emotionally unavailable.
- 9. The less preferred parent is an incompetent parent.
- 10. The less preferred parent lacks knowledge of child's developmental needs compared to the more preferred parent.
- 11. The more preferred parent is more sensitive to the child's culture than the less preferred parent.
- 12. Gender, race, ethnicity, and preferred activities may impact upon the child's resistance/refusal/fear.
